Now Roumania has decided, and is mobilizing. Diplomats here are "puss", cooting"—what is going on it is impos-sible to learn. But from all I have been told in the past I consider it a virtual certainty that when the first soldier of King Charles crosses the frontier in the Fransylvanian Alps. Roumania will have been guaranteed not only Transylvania if she can win it, but also all or part of the predominantly Roumanian section of Bessarabia. Nor' was the question of territorial bargaining the only one to be settled before Roumania made her decision. She had to be sure she was on the winning side. She must be certain that no German phalanx would burst upon her and grind her to pieces—the fate of Serbia was before her eyes.
